Ascencio currently serves as ASI Vice President and now holds the title of Deputy Speaker for the Social Justice and Equity Council (SJEC) at CSSA. Monh currently serves as a student representative for CPP and now holds the title of Sustainability Officer at CSSA. Ascencio is currently a fourth-year business student with an emphasis in management and human resources, and Monh is currently a first-year civil engineering graduate student with an emphasis in environmental water resources.

“I am extremely proud to be representing Cal Poly Pomona,” said Ascencio. “I feel obliged to those who have come before me, to those who will come after me, and to those who need their voice represented, to do the best job possible.”

The role of Deputy Speaker for the SJEC entails the promotion of multiculturalism through education, communication and advocacy for underrepresented communities; the role of Sustainability Officer involves advocacy of environmentally responsible practices through the preservation of resources.

CSSA is an organization composed of student representatives from 23 of the California State University (CSU) campuses. The organization advocates for issues pertaining to the enhancement of higher education and student experiences.
